DEAR DIANE

by Diane Van Arsdale

DEAR DIANE:

I agree with the 15-year-old girl who is "DETERMINED!" and only if, they will be financially and emotionally ready to get married after high school College is not for everyone. I graduated from high school with honors and got married two months later! I had been engaged for over a year. My priority was not a career. I had a desire at home for me growing up and that is what a child needs, if it is financially possible. In this day and age it is sad that most women cannot be home with their children because they must hold a job to keep out of debt.

As of now, I hold a part time job, and all of my earnings are put in our savings account. We are homeowners and we survive comfortably on my husband's income (which isn't better than average!). When we do decide to have children, we are planning to be able to keep me at home with them. The best job I ever had to hold will be at home bringing up my children with our ideas and standards rather than some babysitter's. It's so important to have a close relationship with your children — much more important than an extra buck in my pocket! In my opinion, I was not too young to marry at 18. It isn't fair to generalize!

YOUNG & HAPPY

DEAR YOUNG

While I am indeed happy that things are working out well for you and your husband, you are in the minority for a young, married woman of your age and education. I am still stick to my guns and advise young people to establish themselves financially, and as you pointed out, to be sure they're emotionally mature, before they consider marriage.

You had an excellent point, by the way, when you said college is not for everyone. Indeed, it is not. There are plenty of opportunities in the service fields. Those young people who don't want to go to college, or who don't necessarily have the grades, should seriously consider vocational training instead. This country was built on the fruits of good honest labor, and that's nothing to be sneered at or degraded.

His parents did not take kindly to my plea to help him learn to deal with stress by allowing him to think for himself. My solution? I sat down with him and explained the reason we must work things out together. A compromise was made. If things get out of his control and he feels the need to leave the situation for a while, I let him go. His part of the bargain is not to go "home" to Mom," but for a drive or walk to think things through by himself.

SYMPATHETIC

DEAR SYMPATHETIC

Thank you for your insight on this matter and congratulations on the compassionate reasonable way you approached your problem. I'm sure you've helped many couples today through sharing this experience.

Antiques and Collecting

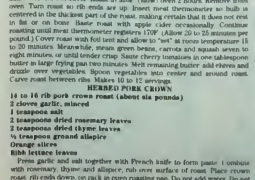
by Robin & Terry Kowel

Every antiquer's alphabet reads with Bentley Antiques. This Hungarian earthenware was first made in 1882. Its trademark is the lotus flower of Pecs. Hungary at the time was under the Turkish rule. Two different alphabets were made with ornamental pieces were made with Persian inspired designs. The most collectible Zsolnay today is the art nouveau ware usually covered with iridescent glazes and luster decorations. The pottery was first designed by Vilmos Wartha about 1860 and the line remained until about 1910. Fanciful animal figures, birds, and figural figures and iridescent wares were favored.

Q. Who were the Wade figures first made? I am trying to find the old as well as new ones.

A. Wade animals were first made in 1930 Brooks Bond Ltd. asked Wade of England to make a series of small animal figures to be given away in Red Rose tea boxes. Thirty two different animals were made from 1931 to 1972. Twenty-four nursery figures were made from 1954 to 1972. Twenty-four Disney figures were made from 1955 to 1972. Twenty-four Walt Disney World figures were made after 1980 and remained until about 1990. Fabled mythical figures, birds, novelty figures and iridescent wares were favored.

Q. I have just found a set of small bisque figures of bathing beauties. Some had no suits. Each full-figured, curvaceous figure is less than five inches long. The hairdos and faces look as if they were made years ago. Were sexy ladies popular models for figurines in past times?



A. Although the Victorian times were considered to be very prim and proper there were still many erotic and risque collectibles from the period. A few porcelain figures were made to reveal ankles or semi-naked bathing suit attiring picturing a fully dressed woman might be different when turned over — but who'd would picture the woman's bare backside.

Many suggestive dress-undressed figures were made. Your bathing

NEBARI LEGACY LS 4-WD WAGON

Subaru just shouldn't have always been known for being quirky and different. For years, the firm capitalized on the fact it marched to the beat of a very personal drummer in remaining unpublished. The Subaru Difference"? Is Subaru was making revolutionary product changes, 11-mile, Toyota, and even on hand cleaner. Now, however, Subaru has revamped its line, and the automotive press had ignored three. After spending a week in the Legacy LS four-wheel drive wagon, it's appropriate to say the lack of publicity is outright silly. The Legacy LS 4 wheel drive wagon is comfortable in any possible manner, with a wide cloth-covered front bucket seats. There's plenty of room up front for two adults and adequate, but comfortable for two adults for short trips. As the model tested was a wagon, luggage space was enormous, and standard cargo for the back compartment to keep the contents invisible to prying eyes.

Fresh and interior design are excellent. There is a reasonably complete instrument panel and storage nooks and crannies abound. A cupholder is standard too — a necessity in today's busy world.

Powering the Legacy wagon is an all-aluminum, horizontally opposed, fuel injected 4 valve per cylinder 2.2 litre "4" producing 130 HP. This engine delivers this 2,800 vehicle from 0-60 in 10.4 seconds, excellent considering its standard all-wheel drive and 4 speed automatic transmission. Low-end torque was excellent, and it smooth, too, and at idle has an enjoyable "shake." At mean level (actually a mileage on ALTITALK a 28% mile loop was 18 city and 22 highway well below par for the class and far from its EPA estimates of 21 city and 28 highway.

Handling gear changes was a 4 speed electronic overdrive automatic. It's a $750 option, and performed flawlessly. As mentioned earlier, the test Legacy was equipped with full time 4 wheel drive. It's engaged at all times, the latest $1,200 and $1,800 extra.

Coupled with the 4 wheel drive system is a dash-controlled body height raiser. It yields 1.8 inches of extra clearance for plowing through deep snow. A word of caution: the Legacy is an inclement weather and dirt road runner NOT a "mountain goat" 4 wheel drive. This is a car, not a truck! Another point: despite hype, 4 wheel drive on dry pavement offers zero zero encountered with the Subaru. Think hard before spending the extra cash for 4 wheel drive over 2 wheel. Remember they use less more gas than standard vehicles, cost more initially, and need more repairs. Don't buy it on a whim!

A note here: this vehicle is aimed at the family wagon safety-conscious consumer market. This is evidenced by its standard equipment package of power steering, 4 wheel power disc brakes (anti-lock is optional for $1,095) a fairly decent AM/FM stereo cassette with graphic equalizer (subaru stereos are usually dismal), power windows, power locks, cruise control, and much more.

What's wrong with the Legacy 4 wheel drive? Just about nothing, though gas mileage was disappointing. Quality control was excellent, even the heater and air conditioner rate high, though the automatic temperature control feature is mediocre. At about $18,500 plus tax, it's expensive, too.

Overall, the Subaru Legacy 4 wheel drive wagon is also available in 2 wheel drive) is a pleasant, practical vehicle. It's been totally ignored by car reviewers but in most ways is extremely competitive with anything in its class. The Legacy just may be for you!

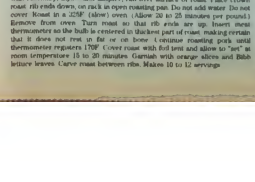
THE CHOPPING BLOCK

by Philomena Corradeno

A Pork Crown Roast is particularly elegant. What's more, pork is nutritious and right now is reasonably priced. There's little waste and remember, producers are breeding leaner pork 50 percent leaner than 20 years ago.

One of these roasts is rubbed with aromatic seasonings. The other has no prior seasonings and is served with vegetables nestled in its center.

PORK CROWN ROAST WITH VEGETABLES
1 pork crown rib center roast (about 6 pounds)
1 cup apple cider
½ pound fresh green beans
½ pound baby carrots
½ pound patty pan squash
20 to 24 cherry tomatoes
4 tablespoons butter, divided
1 tablespoon chopped chives



Place crown roast, rib ends down, on rack in open roasting pan. Do not add water. Do not cover Roast in 325F (slow) oven 2 hours. Remove from oven. Turn roast so rib ends are up. Insert meat thermometer so bulb is centered in the thickest part of the roast, making certain that it does not rest on fat or on bone. Continue roasting pork until thermometer registers 170F. Cover roast with foil and allow to "set" at room temperature 15 to 20 minutes. Garnish with orange slices and Bibb lettuce leaves. Carve roast between ribs. Makes 10 to 12 servings.

14 to 16 rib pork crown roast (about six pounds)
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons dried rosemary leaves
2 teaspoons dried thyme leaves

Tots To Teens

by Sue Ellen Bollman

Dear Sue: Whenever I take my son to the store, he screams until I leave. Everyone stops and stares at me. I don't think I am hitting him or abusing him in some way. If I take him to church, he acts up on such, we have to make a quite embarrassing visit home. He has started smoking now — nursing. You can't help but laugh when you hear a little boy barely three years old, using such foul language. He doesn't know what it means, of course, but it draws attention. How can I get him to stop? Lynn A.

Dear Lynn He will stop when he stops getting all the attention he's doing things for. If you laugh at his foul language, he is getting the audience he wants. No matter how funny it may be, don't laugh when you hear a little boy barely three years old, using such foul language. He doesn't know what it means, of course, but it draws attention. How can I get him to stop? Lynn A.

If he gets you to leave church and storms by crying, then whenever he wants to go, he knows that crying will accomplish this thing, so to him rendezvous his pattern of behavior. Naturally you can't let him disrupt the whole church service or cause a riot in the store. Leave him home with a babysitter and make it clear to him that the reason for this is because of the way he is acting in public. Don't take him with you again until he promises to behave himself.

Pet Care

by Cleo & Brad Conrad

While taking a leisurely spring time stroll this past weekend we saw a sight which reminded us of something we often discussed in this column. It concerns the ultimate responsibility of a pet owner that is, knowing when it is time to let go of a beloved pet.

We passed a woman in the street walking her obviously elderly dog. It looks the dog's body was a tumor so large the skin of the stomach nearly scraped the ground. It was painful just to watch that poor animal struggling down the street, dragging that awful lump around. We could only imagine how terribly that dog was suffering.

When an animal gets old and in such an ill state it's possible to die when we have the option to end the pet's suffering it certainly is what may be believed it is doing the animal a great disservice. The animal has been faithful and loving through a number of years. The least an owner can do, to repay this is to relieve enough to let go when it is time.

With only rare beloved pets when the terrible time for saying good bye occurs, we make sure to arrange with our friend during the euthanasia. Believe it or not a grave is never overlooked. Even if, after every thing we've done for our pet, it just don't look right we always respect to see our pet after the procedure to say your last words.

Dollars & Sense

by Bryon Elson

Tax withholding is the process whereby individuals file a statement to collect your income taxes on an installment basis. The goal of this process is the Employee a Withholding Allowance Certificate, more commonly known as Form W-4. To complete this form accurately, you must estimate your annual tax liability and determine the number of withholding allowances you can claim.

For 1990, each allowance you claim reduces the amount of income on which your employer bases your taxes by $2,050. For taxpayers in the 28 percent tax bracket, each with-holding allowance translates into approximately $574 in take-home pay per year, or $48 per month.

When filling out Form W-4 your goal is to match the amount of tax you will owe at the end of the year as closely as possible. Unfortunately, many people fail to do this. Too often, taxpayers misunderstand the purpose of withholding, fail to update their W-4 when tax situations change, or simply cannot follow the sometimes complex instructions on the form itself.
